the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are employed in the public sector has increased by 1.5 million (1990–2000) and the number of people in the public sector has increased by 2.5 million (1990–2000) (Department of Health 2001).

There is a growing emphasis on the need to improve the efficiency of the public sector and to ensure that the public sector is able to deliver the best possible value for money. This has led to a number of initiatives to improve the efficiency of the public sector, including the introduction of competition, the restructuring of public sector organisations, and the introduction of performance measures.

One of the key initiatives to improve the efficiency of the public sector is the introduction of competition. This has led to a number of public sector organisations being privatised, and to a number of public sector organisations being required to compete for contracts. This has led to a number of public sector organisations being required to improve their efficiency in order to be able to compete for contracts.

Another key initiative to improve the efficiency of the public sector is the restructuring of public sector organisations. This has led to a number of public sector organisations being merged, and to a number of public sector organisations being required to improve their efficiency in order to be able to compete for contracts.

A third key initiative to improve the efficiency of the public sector is the introduction of performance measures. This has led to a number of public sector organisations being required to improve their efficiency in order to be able to compete for contracts.
